

GOLDEN TOUCH?

Courier Mail

CITY BEAT

WITH GLEN NORRIS

glen.norris@news.com.au

@glennorris5

GOLDEN TOUCH?

BRISBANE mining executive Corey Nolan has been a busy boy during the pandemic shut-down.

You may recall Nolan (illustrated), who cut his teeth as a teenage miner in the Northern Territory, made a name for himself at lithium outfit Sayona before moving onto metal exploration company Platina Resources a couple of years back.

Platina's platinum fans didn't care too much for his decision to put all his love into a Californian zinc mine last year, but he's not one to give up on their affections. Since the start of the month, while everyone has been at home glued to Netflix, Nolan hasn't sat still.

He's offloaded his Skaergaard gold project in Greenland to a Canadian mob in an $8 million deal before turning around and picking up the Challa Gold Project in Western Australia for a steal.

With gold at seven-year highs he's pretty pleased with his new patch and has the cash to splash for a lingering look-see.

